

James H. Finkelstein is Professor of Public Policy in the George Mason School of Policy, Government, and International Affairs. He has held a variety of academic administrative positions including serving as the founding Vice Dean of the School of Public Policy, Associate Dean of the College of Education and Human Development, and the founding Associate Director for the university's Prince William Campus. Prior to joining Mason, he was Assistant Dean for Research, Development, Governmental Affairs and Planning for the School of Education, Health, Nursing, and Arts Professions at New York University. He has been a senior research administrator in the College of Education at

The Ohio State University and assistant to the Vice President for University Communications and Development.

He is an authority on executive compensation in higher education, presidential employment contracts, university presidents serving on corporate boards and executive search firm contracts in higher education. Other areas of research include educational technology, qualitative research and the cost of educating English Language Learners.

He is a member of professional associations including the American Educational Research Association. He has served as a consultant to government agencies and private sector firms and an expert witness on presidential contracts. He was the founding North American editor of the journal AI & Society and is a member of its editorial board. He served as executive producer of the award winning series, Sesno Reports, which aired on PBS affiliates nationwide.

He is a member of the board of directors for the International Psychotherapy Institute and is a member of the advisory board for Planet Forward. He has served on the board of director for the International Eye Foundation. He was a founding member of the Institute for Educational Transformation, Inc., the C.R. Williams Early Childhood Center and the Lugano Academy for the Electronic Arts.