

Judith Wilde is the founder and principal of beta Group Consulting. She has taught in high school and graduate schools, but found a passion in working to improve educational outcomes for English learners and others at risk of educational failure – a highlight of her career was directing the US Department of Education-funded National Clearinghouse for English Language Acquisition (NCELA) as well as sharing her research in the area on national and international levels. Her recent work includes teaching as an adjunct professor at George Mason University; serving as Chief-of-Staff for the School of Public Policy, Government, and International Affairs; and analyzing data regarding presidential employment contracts, university presidents serving on corporate boards, and executive search firm contracts in higher education. Other areas of work include evaluating professional development activities at the US Postal Service Office of the Inspector General and serving as vice president at the Council for Higher Education Accreditation.

Dr. Wilde has written extensively on topics related to the education of English learners, professional development, evaluation, research design, educational equity, professional development, and student assessment. She has provided professional development (PD) to staff at the US Department of Education, state education agencies, and local education agencies; evaluated PD in a variety of settings; worked with private organizations such as the National Council of State Legislatures, the Council of Great City Schools, and the Council of Chief State School Officers; developed grant proposals that have provided schools and districts with over $40 million in funding; and has analyzed data and written reports for state- and federally-funded programs.

She holds an MAT in secondary education and a PhD in research/evaluation design and analysis with a minor in cross-cultural human development. She also holds a private pilot license and is an active member of the hot air ballooning community.
